Residency and fellowship program directors and program managers, play important—and synergistic—roles in the creation and maintenance of high-quality OBGYN graduate medical education (GME) programs. Administrating a successful residency or fellowship program is challenging and at times quite difficult, but always rewarding and gratifying. The directorship and coordinator learning curve is steep and must be handled effectively and expeditiously for our residents and fellows to be well served through their postgraduate medical education years.

Program directors’ and managers’ roles are multiple, requiring a commitment of time, energy, and enthusiasm for successful performance. To assist new OBGYN program leaders, CREOG has developed the School for Residency and Fellowship Program Directors and Managers to educate them on how to do the best job possible for their programs. The school is open to all residency program directors, fellowship- directors, and managers.

The Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education (ACGME) regulations can be daunting but navigating the waters of program leadership in GME involves so much more: a combination of lectures, panel presentations and discussion sessions, the School provides multiple topics which are fundamental and critically important to a well-run program. Through the expertise of an experienced and knowledgeable faculty, the School addresses highly interactive format.
